The #NedbankIMC #UpClosePersonal conference took place on Friday 15 September at Urban Brew Studios, Johannesburg, playing host to a stellar lineup of marketing and media experts, both local and from abroad.

We caught up with some of the speakers; including Anganathi Beyile, a student from the Red and Yellow Cape Town, who spoke about purpose pandering.

A topic close to his heart as a young person in the industry, Beyile says there are brands that jump on social movements, taking a stance, without actually understanding what that movement means and whether their values align with their brand purpose.

“It is important to pick social movements that align with what you are to your actual core audience. Brands are alike people, they remind us of the relationship we share with people,” he says.

He adds that consumers want brands to obviously share in the same movements and pain points that they share. “But have to be careful so you do not alienate a big part of your audiences when you do this.”
