🗱 BIZCOMMUNITY

Kagiso Trust survey seeks to learn from community resilience during Covid crisis

The Kagiso Trust has launched a national survey seeking to understand and learn from the community resilience shown in the face of the Covid-19 crisis and its associated socioeconomic effects.

The national survey invites community-based organisations (CBOs) and nongovernmental organisations (NGOs) to share their experiences in supporting disadvantaged communities. It asks the organisations to share their experiences on partnership, on accessing resources and on any interaction with government at this time. It further asks them to share ideas on new challenges and strategies for the immediate future.

Kagiso Trust, an organisation that supported NGOs and CBOs during the antiapartheid struggle and currently working to overcome poverty, will use the strategies learned to shape its future programmes.

"Communities all over South Africa have shown resilience in the face of Covid-19," says communications and marketing head Mandisa Tselane. "We salute these communities and commend CSOs and CBOs for their quick and effective response."

Impact, reach of emergency responses

Mandisa Tselane, communications and marketing head, Kagiso Trust

While the survey seeks to highlight community resilience as communities navigate their way through the current difficult times, it also seeks to better understand the impact and reach of emergency responses, and to learn about obstacles communities encounter as they respond to the pandemic.

"We want to engage on how these barriers may be overcome, and how we can use what we learn as we continue the struggle to overcome poverty, inequalities and socioeconomic injustice," says Tselane.

Organisations, individuals and informal groups that have been involved in the Covid-19 emergency response are invited to take part in the survey which closes 30 October. Kagiso will share the results of the survey with all respondents.

The survey can be accessed here.

For more, visit: https://www.bizcommunity.com