

CCS acquired by RIB Software, rebrands to RIB CCS

Following its 100% acquisition by software multinational RIB Software SE, Construction Computer Software (CCS) has been rebranded as RIB CCS.

Andrew Skudder, CEO of RIB CCS

According to Andrew Skudder, CEO of RIB CCS, the benefits of the partnership and rebranding are numerous, with the new identity coming as a result of new technology demands, the implementation of new thinking and working methods, and shareholder alignment on digital transformation.

“The partnership with RIB provides a wealth of opportunity for RIB CCS in the form of investment in R&D, access to new technology and innovative solutions such as the first construction industry cloud platform, new channels to market, and partnerships with other RIB companies,” he said.

Skudder noted that outside of the new name and identity, it would be business as usual for current customers as RIB CCS will continue to provide the same solutions, support and services along with access to new technologies.

“We believe the African continent will benefit greatly from our iTWO 4.0 and MTWO platform technology,” said RIB Software SE chairman and CEO Tom Wolf. “The rebranding of the company to form RIB CCS is an important step in our mission to maintain our position as the international market leader for 5D BIM digital transformation in the building and infrastructure industries.”
