

How cooking oil brought a moment of joy during a dreadful week

By Howard Feldman

22 Jul 2021

It is possible that cooking oil prevented more looting in South Africa in the last week than the president, the ANC, the intelligence community, the army and the police combined. This, without question, says something about the versatility of the product. It says even more about the state of the state. When you are shown up by canola, you might want to revisit your strategy.

Source: Reuters/Siphiwe Sibeko

When you are shown up by canola, you might want to revisit your strategy. It's not even as if it was extra virgin olive oil known for its health properties.

A video shared on social media of looters in KZN slipping on a floor, wet with oil, was a rare moment of joy in an otherwise horrific week in South Africa.

“ Shoprite employees pored cooking oil outside the store so looters can't get in. The video is pure gold

💎💎💎💎💎💎💎💎💎 pic.twitter.com/72A3p5SFIC— Tilka Paljk (@TilkaPaljk) July 15, 2021 ”

According to Tugela Ferry Shoprite manager, Mlungisi Zindela, they were just taking chances by pouring oil on the floor outside, to prevent looters from getting into the supermarket. It was a scene out of a movie, when the situation demands that the hero under attack from the bad guys use whatever resources are available on the property to stymie the threat.

It is a scene that is normally characterised by him (it's generally a male) looking through drawers to see what is available to him. It was a MacGyver moment: one that had us not only rooting for them, but cheering them on. And it worked. Not only did it deter any would-be looters, but it also returned the power to those who have been so disempowered.

“ Improve, adapt, overcome. 💎💎#SouthAfricaShutDown #southafricaburning pic.twitter.com/BdgCZXt87w— Danie Barnard (@DaanBarnard) July 14, 2021 ”

Put another way: The oil incident outside Shoprite became a symbol for what was to become patently clear over the next few days as the country tried to figure out how it all had gone so wrong.

It showcased in a bottle of oil how South Africans needed to rely on the resources available to them to survive. Whether it was canola, privately armed citizens, private security companies or well-meaning members of community, survival meant understanding that government was not going to help. Because whilst they met and spoke and spoke and debated, people were dying and lives were being destroyed.

SA's big retail chains race to restock looted stores

Nqobile Dladla 19 Jul 2021

Ordinary citizens to the rescue

South Africa emerged through the last week of riots, not because of the ANC, but despite them. It was a week that saw ordinary citizens send a message that lawlessness, corruption and mayhem is not something that they were prepared to tolerate. It was a week of strength and of kindness and of care. A week of surprises and moments that showcased snapshots of beauty amongst all the reels of horror and loss.

The taxi drivers in the Eastern Cape stepped up to assist. According to the Daily Maverick, Santaco Eastern Cape deputy chairperson Gabs Simphiwe Mtshala said that during a patrol of Kidd's Beach in East London, taxi drivers working with the police and security guards managed to stop an attempted looting at the Vincent Park Mall.

Mtshala said the attempted looting, which led to the Vincent Park Mall and Hemingways Mall being temporarily closed on Tuesday, was not the only looting attempt in the province. "There were attempted attacks in Lusikisiki and Gqeberha. Working with the police and security personnel, we managed to defuse all these attempts in the province," said Mtshala.

The citizens of the country did what they needed to do whilst the ANC made strong-sounding statements with weak-sounding voices.

South Africa burning - shocked but not surprised

Dominic Gaobepe 16 Jul 2021

It didn't end there. When the riots calmed down, the ANC continued to debate with each other if this was a coup or just a very bad hair day. Was this insurrection, or something less and they wondered when it would be safe to step in and take the credit. Whilst they did that ubuntu flights, convoys of trucks, all financed by charities, began to send essentials. Religious communities and again taxi drivers rallied because they understood what was important at that moment and what could wait for later.

Local government was nowhere to be seen. The army, fresh from protecting deserted beaches from dangerous anti-lockdown swimmers, slowly made their way to where they would have been needed had they managed to get there sooner. And the president, flanked by more security than the province had seen, walked bravely through the ruins, already toured by DA leader John Steenhuisen when support was actually needed.

The president was almost right when he said that this is not who we are. What he should rather have said is that this is not who “you” are. And then he would have been spot on. The ANC does not reflect the morality and magnificence of South Africans. It is disconnected and removed from its people. And who we are as people is not who the ANC is as a party.

If anything became clear over the last few weeks, it's that the ANC has not only failed its own people, but it has failed itself. Armed with cooking oil, South Africans will do what it takes to survive. Despite the ANC.

ABOUT HOWARD FELDMAN

Howard Feldman is one of SA's leading entrepreneurs and Head of Marketing & People at Synthesis. His experience is global and extensive, spanning more than 20 years of working as a businessman, philanthropist and social commentator. Feldman was the chairperson of the Board of the South African Jewish Report, the only weekly Jewish newspaper in Africa, and he is a global keynote speaker, business strategist, author and morning drive show host.

▀ How cooking oil brought a moment of joy during a dreadful week - 22 Jul 2021

▀ First they took Tempo, and now everything is off beat - 22 Jul 2020

▀ It would be a grave mistake to order your coffin too late - 9 Jul 2020

View my profile and articles...

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>