

#BeautifulNews: Caught between a rock and a hard place? Dare to climb

Chalk-covered hands grip neon holds. Legs stretch across ledges to keep balance. One slip and you drop the ground. But the frustration of falling only fuels Glenn Moncrieff's motivation. There's a peak to reach – it's just a matter of figuring out the route. He knows all too well the obstacles that come with climbing. Moncrieff has been doing it for 10 years, and relishes the process. "The unpredictability and challenges of a climbing wall mirror life," he says. Because of this parallel, Moncrieff is showing the ropes to vulnerable youth.

Moncrieff cofounded the NPO DreamHigher to bring climbing to children living on the street. The sport requires resources and access. By opening it up to kids in Cape Town, Moncrieff is bridging social divides.
