

Kantar BrandZ lesson 7 of 7: Capitec Bank on making a meaningful difference with an entrepreneurial mindset

Banks were the most valuable category in the 2021 Kantar BrandZ Most Valuable South African Brands ranking, comprising 28.6% of its total value. Capitec Bank was the bank with the least negative growth in 2020 and continued its success as the biggest winner in 2021, with an increase of 10% in brand value. Here's how the brand has been adding digital clients by ramping up its meaningful difference...

Analysis of the Kantar BrandZ Global brand valuations in 2021 shows that the most valuable brands start off with strong meaningful difference, then amplify that to grow.

But Stina van Rooyen, head of Brand, South Africa, Insights Division, Kantar, reveals that there's more to it than that. In fact, the secret sauce to predisposing people to pick your brands over the competition lies in creating Meaningful Difference: "Ultimately, predisposed consumers end up buying with less reminding, because you have succeeded in building up a bank of cumulative associations on which they have come to rely. As a result, they don't need to evaluate their options every time they make a decision because they have already created a mental shortcut, such as the Capitec Bank sound and distinctive logo. Of course, this predisposition isn't open-ended or infinite; rather, you need to keep reinforcing it through marketing and brand experience."

That's why in addition to claiming #11th place in the ranking with a brand value of $928m in the challenging socio-economic climate, Capitec Bank stood out for making a meaningful difference in consumers' lives and setting trends while meeting both functional and emotional needs.

Gerrie Fourie, CEO of Capitec Bank says it all boils down to agility, resilience and innovation. This focus on turning the economic crisis into an opportunity to bolster their digital offering while staying true to fundamentals of simplicity, affordability and personalised service has seen Capitec Bank's active digital banking clients across the app, internet banking and USSD growing by 22% to 8.9 million to now comprise slightly more than half of its total 16.3 million customers.

The retail banking app's remote onboarding feature allows customers to open a Global One account in real-time by scanning in their face and identity document, to use the free virtual card designed for safer online shopping, with no transaction fees. Clients can also use their app to scan and pay on Snapscan, Zapper or Masterpass making cashless banking easier and more convenient.

Fourie confirms: "We bolstered our digital offering while staying true to our fundamentals of simplicity, affordability and personalised service. This combined with our continued commitment to our branch network and call centres, resonated with South Africans from all walks of life. We're seeing rapid growth in South Africa's digital economy as clients also adopt contactless card payments and online shopping."

Banking on making a digital difference by creating client-centric value in the digital era

In a competitive category, ramping up that difference is critical. A recent study by Kantar BrandZ looked at price elasticity for 700 different brands relative to their category peers and found that brands with lower Difference lose roughly 50% more volume for the same change in price, across categories and markets. That's because a brand that is perceived as Different is much harder to substitute with a competitive alternative.

Difference therefore provides more than just a reason to choose at the time of purchase. It also helps justify the price asked, and offers strong justification post-purchase, as consumers perceive the brand as providing something distinct in the marketplace that they can't get from anyone else. Brands can create perceived difference through innovation as well as disruption, by shaking things up in your own business or the category overall.

That's why in addition to being most meaningfully different, Capitec Bank also tops the table for being both value- and difference-driven. That difference is linked to innovation and a strong drive towards positive disruption, with Capitec not only doubling down on all things digital but also having celebrated the opening of its futuristic new office in Stellenbosch in the heart of the industry's pandemic panic in July 2020.

This physical flash reassured customers that the bank is not a digital flash in the pan. It has stable brick-and-mortar roots, giving more credence to Capitec's standing as the first in the country to position itself as a digital bank. It has maintained its innovative positioning through initiatives like its virtual bank cards, scan-to-pay capabilities, and even a partnership with Shell. Recently, Capitec Bank has reported strong results and a user base that is growing by roughly 180,000 clients per month.
