15 Oct 2020

MyBroadband has experienced a big increase in online advertising campaigns in recent months, which is excellent news for the South African ICT industry.

The South African economy is starting to recover from the biggest downturn in decades, and the ICT industry is leading the charge.

The Covid-19 pandemic and lockdown have accelerated digital transformation and have forced companies to adapt.

This new way of operating has significantly increased the demand for a wide range of IT and telecoms products.

It has also changed the way ICT companies market their products, with a far bigger focus on digital marketing.

With the absence of industry conferences and with fewer people on the roads, companies have also moved their event, radio and outdoor budgets online.

How MyBroadband helps South African ICT companies to grow

The most popular and best-performing campaigns have been:

- Sponsored content combined with social media promotions
- Display advertising, especially home page or category takeovers
- Video campaigns, like MyBroadband's new online show What's Next with Aki Anastasiou
- The success of these campaigns bodes well for the South African ICT industry, as it shows there is strong demand for these services
