15 Feb 2021

On 11 February 2021, President Cyril Ramaphosa delivered the annual State of the Nation address, done digitally this year due to Covid-19 restrictions limiting the usual red carpet style of the event that most South Africans have enjoyed seeing over the years. But without the usual pizzazz of it all, the president gave an address that focused on the Covid-19 pandemic, the current economic situation and providing much needed hope.

Meltwater, the world's leading editorial and social media analytics company, tracked social media mentions surrounding this year's State of the Nation address to see some of the online reactions to the key focus areas that the president addressed.

Social media analysis

On 11 February 2021, when looking at the amount of times 'SONA' or 'State of the Nation Address' was mentioned on social media in South Africa, it was just over 4,000 times. Compared to last year's address, which took place on 13 February 2020, the amount of mentions was just over 10,000. The reason for the high number of mentions last year included the presence of Miss Universe, South African-born Zozibini Tunzi, reactions to the usual glitz and glam of the red carpet fashion, as well as reactions to topics that the president touched on (such as youth unemployment).

Even though this year's 'SONA' garnered few social media mentions, the social reach of these mentioned was 235 million people on 11 February 2021. At least 94% of these social media mentions came from Twitter, 5% were from blogs and 1% were from online forums.

When it comes to how South Africans were feeling about this year's SONA address, the data indicates that 79% of social media mentions on 'SONA' or 'State of the Nation Address' were negative on 11 February 2021. Social media comments that were of a negative nature include users who felt underwhelmed by what the president had to say this year. One Twitter user felt misled by the 'narrow definition of unemployment', while others felt that watching SONA is a waste of time.

However, the 21% of online users who felt positive about this year's SONA praised the president for his efforts in acquiring Covid-19 vaccines, as well as how he touched on corruption in the country being "one of the greatest impediments to the country's growth and development", as The Citizen News tweeted.

"SONA" Sentiment

Looking at some of the trending themes to have emerged from this year's SONA, it echoes how President Ramaphosa chose to focus his speech mainly on the Covid-19 pandemic, the economy and unemployment rate. These are noted to be some of the key themes that online users picked up on, alongside the following trending themes:

- 'ANC incompetence and corruption', which refers to this tweet from @SimonPGrindrod that gained much engagement
- 'Unnecessarily expensive displays', which refers to this tweet from @MelBala regarding the cost of this year's SONA as opposed to the previous year

Without the usual pomp and circumstance of this year's State of the Nation Address, social media users in South Africa did not seem all too invested in tuning into what the president had to say. But for those who did listen in, very little positivity was felt towards what President Ramaphosa addressed in his speech. Perhaps there will be more to look forward in next year's SONA; only time will tell.
