

Mining: protecting nature while developing the economy

The February 2013 edition of online magazine Rooted Wealth looks at how mining companies can cope with a hike in electricity costs, and if Waterberg is the next Emalahleni, how will the Waterberg biosphere be protected? With government's efforts to spend R827 billion to develop infrastructure for the next three years, are systems to procure tight enough? What measures are in place to curb price fixing and formal kickbacks? For more, go to www.rootedwealth.com.

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>