

F1 review: Britain 2021 and some ramblings

The British F1 Grand Prix is special for Britons, but it is also special for fans who like the historical side of the sport. The first Grand Prix as part of the Formula One World Championship was staged at Silverstone in 1950, a circuit built on an old airfield used in World War II.

The formula has since gone from strength to strength and it is, again, at the British Grand Prix where we see a significant change to the format with the introduction of a sprint race. The sprint race has been devised in the hope that racing will be more exciting and its result will form the grid for the race proper. This idea will take place at two other events in the 2021 season.
