

Going green in your home

The increasing scarcity of Earth's resources like water and energy has prompted consumers to be more conscious of the environment, with many people now choosing to follow a "green" lifestyle and building homes which are energy efficient.

Dominique Geszle, an architect from the National Home Builders Registration Council (NHBRC) attests to the fact that even in the building industry, green architecture is fast becoming a necessity as stringent regulations have developed to ensure that home builders comply with new laws to build green homes.

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>